AMENDMENTS TO THE ABSTRACT

Compositions and methods which permit effective use of multiplexed particles of dimensions less than the resolution of the detector are useful in assessing the spatial pattern of targets or substructures within a specific environment. The number of particulate labels present in a detection space can be determined by measuring the intensity of signal emitted by a signal generating entity that is uniform in each multiplex particle.